The opening of the 10,000 square foot center will provide a number of highly skilled engineering jobs and extends Jabil's design capabilities in concept feasibility, development engineering, industrialization, material technology and advanced manufacturing technology. Jabil's design center in Wroclaw has a range of capabilities that include electronic power design, industrialization support, mechanical design, printed circuit board design, project management and value add/value engineering.

Speaking at the opening, Jabil Vice President for Technology April Butterfield said, "This design center will give Jabil the next generation capabilities and talent necessary to help our customers to continue to stay ahead of trends."

Wroclaw is a leading research and development location with over 100,000 students and 26,000 graduates. The center is located less than 5 hours by car to Warsaw, Berlin, Prague, Bratislava and Vienna, with air connections to over 57 European destinations, making it easy to serve Jabil's customers in Europe and beyond.

Along with the center, Jabil will also co-locate its European Human Resources Employee Services (HRES) team in Wroclaw. The HRES team will support 21 of Jabil's sites across Europe with HR tasks, working across 10 European countries and eight languages.

Currently Jabil employs over 17,500 people in Europe including close to eighty employees at its European Corporate Hub in Livingston, Scotland.
